WISCONSIN WATER ALLIANCE WELCOMES NEW BOARD MEMBERS

Organization continues to ramp up efforts at critical time

[Madison, Wis.] – Today, the Wisconsin Water Alliance announced the addition of two new members to its board of directors: Lee Nerison, a retired farmer and former state lawmaker; and T.J. Tuls, a resident of Rock County and chief operations officer of Tuls Dairies. Both individuals bring unique perspective to the Alliance as the organization continues to expand its efforts.

Lee Nerison is a retired farmer and former member of the Wisconsin State Assembly. During his time in the Legislature, Lee was a leader on issues impacting agriculture and the environment – chairing the Assembly Committee on Agriculture and serving on the Committee on Natural Resources. He resides in Westby in Vernon County.

T.J. Tuls is a fourth generation dairy farmer. He grew up learning the industry on his family’s dairy farm in Nebraska; today, he manages Rock Prairie Dairy near Janesville and Pinnacle Dairy in Brodhead, and he serves as chief operations officer of the family company, Tuls Dairies.

Dan Ellsworth, president of Wisconsin Water Alliance, released the following statement on the new board additions:

“I’m thrilled to welcome Lee Nerison and T.J. Tuls to Wisconsin Water Alliance’s board of directors. Their input and perspective will prove invaluable as we continue to grow the organization and serve as a voice for responsible water policy in the state.”
